

SMART MOVE.

2025 First Quarter Housing Trends — Tucson & Southern AZ

In the first quarter of 2025, the Tucson and Southern Arizona housing market showed signals of resilience and continued movement to a healthy, balanced market – despite stubborn mortgage rates. Year-to-date, the Tucson area experienced a modest +2% increase in home sales compared to the same period in 2024, while available inventory grew by +52% versus

March 2024, reflecting more normal seasonal levels. The median home price in Tucson has remained relatively stable since late 2024. Overall, the region's market continues to demonstrate stability with pockets of strong growth and more choice for buyers, even as prices show signs of leveling off.
